MAY MARATHON

On May 1st, we begin our annual May Marathon—which we are planning to make more substantive, more interesting, and easier to listen to.

In their earliest years, Marathons organized people around the First Admendment and Civil Liberties. Later, particularly in the springs of 1970 and 1971, they evolved into a response and outlet for frustrations during National Emergencies. These Marathons became a reflection of the energy level of the community, a way we read our own pulse. Our concern now is that the pulse has been reading very low all year, in daily income and through fall and winter minithons which went far more slowly than any of us expected.

What troubles us most however are the explanations we hear, from you and from ourselves: That 'BAI's growth always needed the artificial stimulation of Crisis, that the constituency for change in America is sullen and passive after Vietnam, that people are turned off "public solutions," that the station's support has levelled off, reached a plateau, that we shouldn't expect to grow at our previous rate. You can see how hard it would be to work here, with all the craziness and deferred payrolls, if we believed this were true.

Nonetheless, the evidence that it is true has been growing to a point that this Marathon represents a critical test, and an opportunity to speak to some very basic issues.

One of the deepest consequences of Vietnam, for example, may prove its destruction of public self-confidence, the erosion of people's faith that they can control their own lives, the growth of cynicism and indifference that mark the Watergate affair. Will this be true of people who worked for change in America, and not seeing immediate results buried their heads in the sand? Or will we understand this public passivity as a key part of the Administration's "Game Plan" for its assault on the Constitution? That they are, in fact, counting on us to be "tired of causes."

Public television is fighting for its life, and losing the fight. Every warning you ever heard us make about the risks of taking grants from large institutions is proving true. And if that can be blamed on Clay Whitehead, or the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, or the Ford Foundation, who will bear the blame if listener support begins to fail?

MAY MARATHON

On May 1st, we begin our annual May Marathon—which we are planning to make more substantive, more interesting, and easier to listen to.

In their earliest years, Marathons organized people around the First Admendment and Civil Liberties. Later, particularly in the springs of 1970 and 1971, they evolved into a response and outlet for frustrations during National Emergencies. These Marathons became a reflection of the energy level of the community, a way we read our own pulse. Our concern now is that the pulse has been reading very low all year, in daily income and through fall and winter minithons which went far more slowly than any of us expected.

What troubles us most however are the explanations we hear, from you and from ourselves. That WBAI's growth always needed the artificial stimulation of Crisis, that the constituency for change in America is sullen and passive after Vietnam, that people are turned off "public solutions," that the station's support has levelled off, reached a plateau, that we shouldn't expect to grow at our previous rate. You can see how hard it would be to work here, with all the craziness and deferred payrolls if we believed this were true.

Nonetheless, the evidence that it is true has been growing to a point that this Marathon represents a critical test, and an opportunity to speak to some very basic issues.

One of the deepest consequences of Vietnam, for example, may prove its destruction of public self-confidence, the erosion of people's faith that they can control their own lives, the growth of cynicism and indifference that mark the Watergate affair. Will this be true of people who worked for change in America, and not seeing immediate results buried their heads in the sand? Or will we understand this public passivity as a key part of the Administration's "Game Plan" for its assault on the Constitution? That they are, in fact, counting on us to be "tired of causes."

Public television is fighting for its life, and losing the fight. Every warning you ever heard us make about the risks of taking grants from large institutions is proving true. And if that can be blamed on Clay Whitehead, or the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, or the Ford Foundation, who will bear the blame if listener support begins to fail?

The FCC is currently holding back renewal of Pacifica's four broadcast licenses, and its application for a fifth in Washington. We have no idea when or whether those licenses will be granted us. But we know that our ability ...your ability ...to sustain the growth of listener support is the hardest testimony we can bring before the Commission...testimony with implications that reach beyond Pacifica. Will we testify?

All of this adds up to a different kind of challenge to the station. For we are very much on our own in this new period. We are being called upon to generate energy rather than simply reflect it. And, in some basic way, we are being called upon to awaken or at least rally a constituency that does indeed seem a little tired and perhaps a bit cynical. These questions are the backdrop for this Marathon. And they explain why our elation or despair at your response often seems exaggerated. More than our bank balance is at stake.

People always seem to have enjoyed the introspective tone of past Marathons—seemingly the one occasion when the station discusses itself with all of you in the room. This process of internal reflection has been very much a part of our work here at WBAI this past year, and we feel it is important to bring that process into the foreground as we come to you seeking financial support. Accordingly, we will be setting aside regular time slots during which producers will discuss their work (providing excerpts of old programs and works in process) and explore the connection, as they see it, between that work and future directions for the station and for broadcasting in general. Taken together, these slots should add up to an overview of WBAI as it seeks to redefine its responsibilities. It should give you as clear a picture as we can of what your support will actually make possible over the next year.

We also hope the energy and variety of interests among our staff will be reflected in the series of live events we will be producing for nightly performance in Studio C. On each of these evenings, which will be running through the entire Marathon, one of our producers will be putting together some kind of special event. A medieval Mayday ceremony to open the Marathon. A Rent Party. Another session of the Gynecological Self-Help. Free Music Stores. Benefit concerts. Movies. Free forums. And on Saturday, May 19 we plan to hold a Pacifica Field Day on the Great Lawn in Central Park, from noon to 5 p.m., featuring such events as the 10 inch reel discus, a tape eating contest, a softball game, kids games and other events to be dreamed up in stoned out conversations over the next few weeks. And, of course, there will be live coverage and play-by-play accounts of all events.

We hope all this will make the Marathon a little different from past ones. Not that you won't be hearing the phone number again and again, or staff members occasionally disintegrating into fatigue and frustration. But the station we are inviting you to support is growing and changing, and at a time when growth and social change seem to be at a standstill in this country. We want you to know that and hear that as you listen to the Marathon, and be a part of it by supporting WBAI, enjoying some of our live events and helping us in our annual quest for a Guaranteed Annual Year.
